*"Whom shall I send,
and who will go for us?"*

(Isaiah 6:8, ESV)

Isaiah's call came during a hard time (Isaiah 6:1-8). A king had died, the nation was unsettled, and the future felt uncertain. In the middle of that moment, Isaiah saw the Lord sitting on His throne. God was not shaken. God was still in control. Seeing God clearly helped Isaiah see himself clearly. He became aware of his own sins and realized how much he needed God's mercy. Instead of making excuses or trying to defend himself, Isaiah confessed. In response, God showed him grace. An angel came and touched Isaiah's lips, telling him that his guilt was gone. God extended forgiveness before he gave him responsibility. Then God asked a question: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" God did not force Isaiah. He invited him. The call was open, waiting for a willing heart. Isaiah answered simply, "Here am I. Send me." This passage reminds us that God still calls people today. He does not only call pastors or missionaries. He calls everyday believers to serve in homes, workplaces, schools, and communities. God looks for people who are willing, not perfect. Before God calls us to serve, He lovingly prepares us. He offers grace before we embark on our mission. Every believer faces a pivotal choice: Will we boldly step forward or choose to stay silent? God is still asking. The work is still needed, and the opportunity to say yes is still right in front of us.
